

judging God

“she judged him faithful who had promised”

It sounds backward and wrong but God wants us to judge him. In fact before we can receive from him we must judge him. Sarah’s quest to receive a son took a lot of twists and turns. She doubted, laughed at the promise but eventually with time she looked at God and decided he was faithful to His Word. And when her journey of faith took her to the rock solid conclusion of God’s faithfulness, she received the promise.

You judge God: Too many times we sweep under the carpet disappointments we have had in our relationship with the Lord. Recently the Lord spoke this to me, and as I looked back over the landscape of my life I found there were several places where I had believed God for a certain outcome and it had not happened. When I brought this to the Lord’s attention he said, “You are still here aren’t you? I brought you through, I didn’t do it the way you wanted it but I did it!” I realized of course that He was right!

Leave room for sovereignty. Give God the right to do it his way. Let him work all things after the counsel of his own will, knowing that he will come through for you, though it may be different than what you expected. This is the only way our faith can mature and develop. We are not in control, calling the shots. Pray and believe and leave it to God to work it all out. Sarah reached this conclusion and “judged God faithful”. You too can be a person of great faith if you learn this secret!

“I get a real sharp pain when I do this.”

The same thing happens with our thoughts.

“Casting down every thought that exalts itself against the knowledge of God” is the same as the guy with his foot up in the air. The message is, “don’t go there.” You can control what you think as easily as this man can put his leg down. God bless us all as we practice not hurting ourselves!
